In the world of cowboys, there are few things more important than courtesy. After all, these are men who spend their days working together in close quarters, often in dangerous and unpredictable conditions. Without a strong sense of courtesy, it would be easy for things to fall apart.

One of the most important aspects of courtesy at the gate is simply being aware of your surroundings and being mindful of the other people around you. When you're opening or closing a gate, make sure to do so slowly and carefully, and be aware of any other people or animals who may be nearby. It's also important to be respectful of the property of others, and to always ask permission before opening or closing a gate that is not your own.

Specific Examples of Courtesy

There are many specific examples of courtesy that cowboys can show at the gate. Here are a few:

- Opening the gate for someone who is riding behind you.
- Closing the gate behind you, even if you are the last one through.
- Asking permission before opening or closing a gate that is not your own.

Benefits of Courtesy

There are many benefits to being courteous at the gate. For one, it helps to create a more positive and respectful work environment. When cowboys are courteous to each other, it sets a good example for everyone else and helps to create a sense of camaraderie.

Courtesy can also help to prevent accidents. By being aware of your surroundings and being mindful of the other people and animals around you, you can help to avoid accidents and injuries.

Finally, courtesy can help to build relationships. When cowboys are courteous to each other, they are more likely to develop strong relationships that will last a lifetime.

Courtesy is an essential part of the cowboy code. By being courteous at the gate, cowboys can create a more positive and respectful work environment, prevent accidents, and build strong relationships.

If you are a cowboy, I encourage you to make a commitment to being courteous at the gate. It is a simple thing to do, but it can make a big difference.
