In recent years, the Yoruba people of Nigeria have been increasingly vocal in their demands for self-determination. This has led to the emergence of a number of Yoruba Nation activist groups, the most prominent of which is the Yoruba Nation Self-Determination Movement (YNSDM).

The YNSDM is led by Sunday Igboho, a self-styled freedom fighter who has been accused of treason and terrorism by the Nigerian government. Igboho's supporters, however, see him as a hero who is fighting for the liberation of the Yoruba people from what they perceive as the oppressive rule of the Nigerian government.

The Nigerian government has cracked down on the YNSDM, arresting Igboho and several other activists. This has led to widespread protests and calls for Igboho's release. The government has also accused Igboho of being a criminal and a terrorist, but his supporters maintain that he is a patriot who is fighting for the rights of his people.

The debate over whether Igboho is a criminal or a patriot is a complex one. There is evidence to support both sides of the argument. Ultimately, it is up to each individual to decide whether they believe Igboho is a criminal or a patriot.

The Evidence Against Igboho

The Nigerian government has presented a number of pieces of evidence against Igboho, including:

- Igboho was arrested in possession of weapons, including AK-47 assault rifles.
- Igboho has made a number of public statements in which he has called for the overthrow of the Nigerian government.
- Igboho has been linked to a number of violent incidents, including the attack on a Fulani settlement in Oyo State.

The Nigerian government argues that this evidence proves that Igboho is a threat to national security and should be charged with treason and terrorism.

The Evidence For Igboho

Igboho's supporters argue that the evidence against him is fabricated or taken out of context. They point to the fact that Igboho has never been convicted of a crime, and that he has always denied the charges against him.

Igboho's supporters also argue that he is a popular figure among the Yoruba people, and that he is seen as a symbol of resistance against the Nigerian government. They point to the fact that Igboho has been able to organize large protests and rallies, and that he has a significant following on social media.

Igboho's supporters argue that he is a patriot who is fighting for the rights of his people. They believe that he is being persecuted by the Nigerian government because he is a threat to their power.

The debate over whether Sunday Igboho is a criminal or a patriot is a complex one. There is evidence to support both sides of the argument. Ultimately, it is up to each individual to decide whether they believe Igboho is a criminal or a patriot.

However, it is important to note that Igboho has not been convicted of any crime, and that he has always denied the charges against him. It is also important to note that Igboho is a popular figure among the Yoruba people, and that he is seen as a symbol of resistance against the Nigerian government.

Ultimately, it is up to the Nigerian people to decide whether Sunday Igboho is a criminal or a patriot.
