Fincher also shares his thoughts on the state of the film industry. He is critical of the blockbuster mentality that dominates Hollywood, arguing that it has led to a lack of originality and creativity. "I think the problem is that people are too focused on making money," Fincher says. "They're not focused on making good movies."

Despite his frustrations with the industry, Fincher remains passionate about filmmaking. He believes that movies have the power to change the world, and he is committed to making films that are both entertaining and thought-provoking.

The Creative Process

One of the most fascinating aspects of Fincher's interviews is his discussion of the creative process. He talks about how he develops his ideas, writes his screenplays, and works with his collaborators.

Fincher emphasizes the importance of preparation. "I always start with a lot of research," he says. "I want to know everything I can about the subject matter before I start writing." This meticulous approach has helped Fincher create some of the most visually stunning and thematically complex films of our time.

Fincher also discusses the importance of collaboration. He works closely with his screenwriters, cinematographers, editors, and other members of his crew to create his films. "I don't believe in a single auteur," Fincher says. "I think movies are a collaborative medium."
