In the first essay, "Shelter in Place," Charleson shares her own journey as a dog owner during the early days of the pandemic. With her husband deployed to the front lines as a doctor and her children confined to online learning, she found solace and companionship in her two rescue dogs, Maggie and Charlie.

Through vivid prose, Charleson captures the mundane yet profound moments of life with dogs during lockdown. From daily walks in empty parks to impromptu cuddle sessions on the couch, she reveals how her canine companions provided a sense of normalcy and comfort amidst the chaos and uncertainty.

In the second essay, "The Dog Park Effect," Charleson explores the transformative power of dog parks during the pandemic. These once-bustling social spaces became sanctuaries for dog owners, offering a safe and socially distanced way to connect with others and share experiences.

Charleson weaves together the stories of dog owners from all walks of life, each with their own unique experiences of finding companionship, resilience, and connection through their dogs during the pandemic.

Whether you are a dog owner yourself or simply appreciate the special bond between humans and animals, Pandemic with Dogs is an unforgettable and heartwarming read that will inspire you, comfort you, and make you appreciate the unwavering love and loyalty of our furry friends.
