

Spanning the Divide: Latinos as In Theological Education

A Call for Inclusivity, Equity, and Access

In the United States, the Latino population is growing rapidly. By 2060, it is projected that Latinos will make up nearly 30% of the total population. This growth has significant implications for the future of the church, as Latinos are increasingly becoming a part of the fabric of American society.

However, the Latino community faces a number of challenges that make it difficult for them to participate fully in theological education. These challenges include:

- Economic barriers: Latinos are more likely to live in poverty than other groups in the United States. This can make it difficult for them to afford the cost of tuition and other expenses associated with theological education.

- Language barriers: Many Latinos are not native English speakers. This can make it difficult for them to succeed in traditional theological education programs, which are often taught in English.
- Cultural barriers: Latinos come from a variety of cultural backgrounds. This can lead to misunderstandings and conflicts with the dominant culture in theological education institutions.

Despite these challenges, there is a growing movement to make theological education more inclusive for Latinos. This movement is being led by a number of scholars and practitioners who are committed to creating a more just and equitable world.

In this book, Spanning the Divide: Latinos in Theological Education, leading scholars and practitioners offer their insights on the challenges and opportunities facing Latino students in theological education. The book explores a wide range of topics, including:

- The history of Latino theological education
- The challenges facing Latino students
- The best practices for creating inclusive theological education programs
- The future of Latino theological education

This book is an essential resource for anyone who is interested in making theological education more inclusive for Latinos. It is a valuable tool for scholars, practitioners, and policymakers who are working to create a more just and equitable world.
